The Moderators having made several demonstrations in force at our county site, and uttered a great many threats and much abuse of the opposite party, finally challenged the Regulators to meet them on the 17th, at the county site, and fight it out. The Regulators promptly acthe town, evidently as spies, and armed to compelled the prisoners to lead them to the shalled face to face, between forty and sixty on each side, at about one hundred and fifty vards apart, and a parley sounded. The Regulators demanded the immediate disbanding of the Moderators, and a pledge of their heads higher and to talk more patronfuture good behaviour on their part or an izingly than their less fortunate neighbors immediate appeal to arms. The Moderators | -N. Y. General Jackson's Return to Tennessee.

Judge Scott, who delivered the oration at the recent inauguration of the Jackson statue at Memphis, related the following touching incident concerning Jackson's return from Washington to Tennessee in 1837. The day of his return, said the speaker, was to me one of the most memorable of my existence. His old friends and companions determined to give him a public reception; they met together, appointed one of their number to deliver an address, and started to meet him. The young men and boys of our city, following their example, made their arrangements and appointed me as their spokesman. We met him in the cedars near Lebanon. The old men were ranged in front. and the boys in the rear. He got out of his carriage, listened courteously to the address of Judge Campbell, replied happily, and shook hands with his old associates. He then drew emigrants poisoned the water, and threw a near to us. I stepped forward, spoke a few words of kindness, and wound up by saying, "that the children of his old soldiers and friends welcomed him home, and were ready to serve under his banner." His frame shook, he bowed down his head, and while the tears rolled down his aged cheeks, he replied: "I could have stood all but this-it is too much, too much!" The crowd gathered around, and and for a few moments there was a general outburst of sympathy and

It it has increased in equal ratio since, it must be nearly 150,000. He would not urge that the increase has been so great as that, but that it has increased very largely each year, there can be no doubt.

The taxable property of the territory as shown by the official reports was, in 1857, assessed at $18,220,000, and this did not include real estate, to which there can yet be no title, as the surveys have not yet been made. This was an increase of 12 per cent on the amount of the preceding year.

From these deductions Mr. S. said it was lear that the people of Oregon were very the Baltimore road should take action in the rich, or else there were sufficient of them to entitle their admission into the Union. After some further arguments, Mr. Stephens moved way through Washington, by the best route, to connect with this line. > RAILROAD CONNECTIONS .- At the meeting of the President and Directors of the Balti more and Ohio Railroad Company, on Wednesday, the President laid before the board some facts in regard to a connection with the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, through Washington city. That road is expected to be completed to Lynchburg, in September next, by which a portion of the trade of Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, &c., will be opened to Baltimore, and in addition the mail time, now 61 days to New Orleans, will be reduced to about three days. He related the conferences between himself and representatives of the Washington and Alexandria and the Orange roads, and the municipal authorities of Washington were anxious that matter. The President accordingly recom mended the appointment of a special committee to memorialize Congress for a right of the city direction, accordingly moved the appointment of a special committee, which was carried, and Messrs, Travers, J. Spear Nicholas and N. L. Wood named as the committee. They proceeded to Washington to act in the matter. -Balt. Sun.
